The Blood Quran

The Blood Quran is a unique and controversial artifact. It is a copy of the Quran written in the blood of Saddam Hussein, the former president of Iraq. The story goes that Hussein commissioned the creation of this Quran in 1997 to mark his 60th birthday. Over the course of two years, he allegedly donated around 27 liters of his own blood to be used as ink for the manuscript. The Blood Quran is housed in a mosque in Baghdad, but its display and preservation have been subjects of debate due to the ethical and religious implications.
